Why you should consider an RN-to-BSN program

Research has shown that lower mortality rates, fewer medication errors, and quality outcomes are all linked to nurses prepared at the baccalaureate level and beyond.

Enrollment in RN-to-BSN programs is increasing in response to calls for a more highly educated nursing workforce. From 2017 to 2018, enrollments increased by 0.6 percent and graduations were up by 4.6 percent, marking the 15th year of increases in RN-to-BSN programs.

Many professional practice settings, including Magnet hospitals and academic health centers, now require or prefer the baccalaureate degree for specific nursing roles.

With this in mind, RN-to-BSN programs are becoming more important than ever. We encourage you to read the white paper RN-to-BSN Education: The Imperative for Rapid Change to learn more about how to encourage nurses to return to school, as well as the types of courses included in an RN-to-BSN program.
